GOP CONFIDENT TAX BILL WILL BECOME LAW

1 Top U.S. Republicans said they expected Congress to pass a tax code overhaul this week, with a Senate vote as early as Tuesday and President Donald Trump aiming to sign the bill by week's end. John Cornyn, the No. 2 U.S. Senate Republican, said in an interview on ABC's "This Week" on Sunday that he was "confident" the Senate would pass the legislation, "probably on Tuesday." Republican Representative Kevin Brady said he believed his party had the votes to pass the bill. "I think we are headed — the American people are headed — for a big win on Tuesday," Brady, the House of Representatives' top tax writer, said on Fox News' "Sunday Morning Futures with Maria Bartiromo." "We've worked hard to make sure that those strange Senate rules don't hang this up in any way," Brady added. "I am confident that's the case."

US TIP-OFF HELPED RUSSIA HALT TERRORIST ATTACK

2 Russian President Vladimir Putin telephoned President Donald Trump to thank him for a tip-off that helped prevent a terrorist bomb attack on a cathedral in the Russia city of St Petersburg, the Kremlin said. Information provided by the CIA allowed Russian law-enforcement agencies to arrest the would-be attackers before they could carry out their plan, the Kremlin said in a statement posted on its internet site. A senior Trump administration official confirmed Trump and Putin had spoken on Sunday. However, there was no immediate confirmation from U.S. authorities that they had shared the intelligence with Russian officials. The foiled attack was to have been carried out on Kazansky Cathedral, in Russia's second city of St Petersburg, and on other locations in the city where large numbers of people gather, the Kremlin statement said.

LANDSLIDES KILL 26 IN STORM-HIT PHILIPPINES

4 At least 26 people were killed while several residents were missing in an island province in central Philippines after tropical storm Kai-tak brought heavy rains that triggered landslides, local authorities and media said on Sunday. Kai-tak cut power supplies in many areas, forced the cancellation of several flights, stranded more than 15,000 people in various ports in the region and prompted nearly 88,000 people to seek shelter in evacuation centers. The Provincial Disaster Risk Reduction and Management Office of Biliran island said 26 residents had died. Kai-tak cut power supplies in many areas, forced the cancellation of several flights, stranded more than 15,000 people in various ports in the region and prompted nearly 88,000 people to seek shelter in evacuation centers.

POWER OUTAGE CRIPPLES ATLANTA AIRPORT

5 Flights were delayed at Hartsfield-Jackson Atlanta International Airport on Sunday after a partial power outage, leaving passengers at the world's busiest airport stranded in dimly lit terminals or in aircraft idling on tarmacs. The partial shutdown at the start of one of the busiest travel weeks of the year forced the Federal Aviation Administration to hold back flights bound for Atlanta. Departures were delayed as well because equipment inside terminals was inoperative, the agency said, although the FAA flight control tower was operating normally. The cause of the outage, which occurred just after 1 p.m., was not immediately known, the airport said in a statement. It was working with Georgia Power to identify the problem and fix it. The utility had crews at the airport, spokesman John Kraft said.

Tailgating makes traffic worse, but MIT researchers have a solution

Researchers at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology developed a system to reduce stop-and-go traffic.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

If you've driven on any major road, you've probably experienced a traffic jam out of nowhere. Things are moving just along fine until you have to brake, and then you're inching forward for a while. Once you can pick up speed again, you wonder what even caused the traffic.

It turns out, tailgating is to blame, according to MIT researchers. And though tailgating seems like a part of human nature, they've also found a way they say will prevent such stop-and-go congestion.

MIT professor Berthold Horn and post-doc associate Liang Wang, both from the university's Computer Science and Artificial Laboratory (CSAIL), co-authored a paper that was published recently on the common commuting problem.

There's been a ton of research on traffic, Horn said, but he still focused on the issue because he was "desperate to find a solution."

First, here's why those jams are a problem in the first place.

"Each car individually, and its driver, is doing something that's personally rational: They're looking at the car ahead and adjusting their speed based on distance and velocity of that car ahead of them," Horn said.

But when there's a whole system of cars one behind the other, an issue arises. "If one car brakes for any reason, the car behind them has to brake," he said. "The car behind them has to break just a little bit harder, and the one behind that even harder, until it builds up until many many cars behind, someone may actually be stopped on the road, which is the beginning of a traffic jam."

MIT researchers have a possible solution for stop-and-go traffic. GETTY IMAGES

The key to keeping a constant flow of traffic, according to Horn, is not just keeping an eye on the car ahead of you, but also monitoring how close you are to the car behind you.

If drivers kept an equal distance between the car in front and the car behind, in what Horn calls "bilateral control," random jams would disappear. In fact, traffic would go roughly double the speed.

Of course, that's easier said than done, so Horn has an external solution: adaptive cruise-control.

Some cars are already equipped with adaptive cruise-control systems, but their flaw is that they only adjust your car's speed relative to the car right ahead. Horn is proposing systems that also have a sensor at both the front and rear bumpers.

This system could be implemented in self-driving cars, but it could also be added to cars now for a minor cost.

The solution to most traffic is to build more roads, Horn noted, but that's expensive, whereas this could increase the capacity of those roads without the cost of new infrastructure. Plus, lessening traffic would save people time as well as fuel, which would lead to less CO2 released into the atmosphere.

This latest research was sponsored by Toyota, which is planning to put front and rear adaptive cruise-control systems into their cars eventually, Horn said.

TRUMP'S AMERICA

QUICK! READ THESE WORDS BEFORE THEY ARE BANNED FOREVER!

Let's get these words into print right at the top here while we still have the chance. Once the government starts banning language, there's no telling when the banning will stop.

"Vulnerable." "Entitlement." "Diversity." "Transgender." "Fetus." "Evidence-based." "Science-based."

Did you hear about this? The Trump Administration has told officials at the CDC (the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention) that these seven words and phrases must NOT — repeat NOT — be mentioned in the agency's 2018 budget request.

The word-banning isn't stopping there. "Affordable Care Act" and "ACA" were banned at a second federal health agency, whose employees were told to always say "Obamacare" — presumably with a sneer. And the State Department got an even creepier directive. No more "sex education" programs abroad. Now it's "sexual risk avoidance," a tortured euphemism for the "abstinence-only" programs that have long been discredited by "evidence-based" and "science-based" studies.

Oops. Sorry about that.

There is, of course, a word for this kind of censorship and thought control, a word that, thankfully, has not been banned yet. The word is "dumb."

For one thing, it's counterproductive. Whenever people are told not to say something, it only makes them want to say it louder. Just ask any 3-year-old who knows about "poo-poo."

At the same time, all this word banning isn't just ignorant. It can cost lives. Do we really want America's public-health docs to move away from "evidence-based" and "science-based" cures? What would be better? Leeches? Faith-healing? More trips to the Trump International day spa?

None of this should come as a surprise, I suppose. Donald Trump's national security advisers have learned to avoid mentioning Russia around the president. Otherwise, the Washington Post reports, the daily intel briefings go totally "off the rails."

They should probably also avoid Mueller, Flynn, Manafort, Gates and Papadopoulos — the special counsel and the first batch of Trump aides to plead guilty or be indicted in the Russia probe.

Oh, and one other word is best avoided. I won't even write it here, but you'll be hearing more of it. It starts with an "I."

3 tips from 'Holiday Baking Championship' finalist Josh Livsey

Learn a few tricks from the Cambridge competitor.

MATT JUUL
@RunTheJuuls
matthew.juul@metro.us

Watch Josh Livsey compete in the finals Monday night on the Food Network. ISTOCK

Baking desserts on a competition show can get pretty nerve-racking, but Josh Livsey has made it look easy all season on "Holiday Baking Championship."

The New England native and executive pastry chef at Cambridge's Harvest is a finalist on the Food Network series, where he's in the running for a cool $50,000 grand prize. Livsey, who's won more challenges than any of his competitors this season, hopes his work on the show has made Boston proud.

"Hopefully I'm representing Boston well," Livsey says.

Before Livsey throws down on Monday night's finale of "Holiday Baking Championship," check out a few of his tips for novice bakers in the kitchen.

1. Do your homework

Before you even break out all the measuring cups and bowls, Livsey suggest putting in the work to find the right recipes for your tastes and skill level.

"You really just have to find good recipes," says Livsey. "Try to find recipes you can trust."

So basically, do your homework and don't just go for the first recipe that pops up on Google.

2. Stick to the plan

Once you've got a gameplan, make sure to carefully follow the instructions, as baking requires precise measurements with little room for improvisation. One wrong move could spell disaster for your dessert, so leave the kitchen creativity for the decorating part of preparation once everything has been baked.

"Get creative when it comes to decorating or making it look presentable," Livsey says. "But when you're in the actual baking process, try to follow those recipes as closely as possible."

3. When in doubt, make cookies

If you don't know where to start when it comes to baking for the holidays, Livsey recommends making a batch of cookies. As far as desserts go, they're pretty easy to make and don't require a lot of time or effort. Plus, there are a ton of cookie styles you can try.

"They're quick, easy and I think they taste really good," Livsey says. "That's usually my go to."

Polar Seltzer vending machines are beginning to pop up in the Boston area.

The Worcester-based beverage company recently announced it would be setting up "Impossibly Good" machines around the Hub, with proceeds going to local public schools to support arts programs. Fans can grab 8-ounce cans of their favorite "Seltzer Jr." flavors at each location in the Bay State.

"For the next couple of weeks only, we've dropped some special vending machines around Boston," the company wrote on its website. "They're filled with Impossibly Good sparkling seltzers waiting to be purchased by generous folks to raise money for the arts in school."

Polar Seltzer's popular, mythically-themed flavors will be available in the machines, including Unicorn Kisses, Yeti Mischief, Mermaid Songs and Dragon Whispers.

"Every dollar spent will be donated directly to local schools," the company also wrote in its announcement. "We are working directly with Myran Parker-Brass, executive director for the arts at Boston Public schools to help fund and support visual-art education and programs. So, grab a seltzer and support the arts."

Polar Seltzer has revealed a few of the locations in response to fan inquiries on Instagram. The lineup includes the Boston Public Market, Patriot Place, the New Balance headquarters, the Boch Center, as well as Sweet Cheeks Q. Over the summer, the Fenway barbecue restaurant offered boozy flights of the new Polar Seltzer flavors, to the delight of fans.

Expect to see more Polar Seltzer vending machines pop up over the next couple of weeks.

HOW TO GET AHEAD

Should you be investing in cryptocurrency?

Maybe it's time to load up on some digital cash. iStock

Can you really trust Bitcoin's recent rise in value?

PAT KING
@MetroBOS
patrick.king@metro.us

With cryptocurrency companies like Bitcoin and Litecoin blowing up on the stock market recently, you probably reacted to the news in one of two different ways: Kicking yourself for not investing in these companies early on, or kicking yourself for not investing enough.

Many were shocked to see the stock in these companies skyrocket, with even a lesser-known companies like Litecoin reaching a 1,400 percent increase in its initial value this year alone. But with cryptocurrency (the term used for online-only digital cash companies such as Bitcoin) being such a brand new industry, how can anyone predict whether or not they will have the same value a year from now let alone the next few months?

In an effort to help everyday people understand this a little more, Chicago-based data company Hedge Fund Research (HFR) recently announced it will launch a comprehensive database that will show the general public which major hedge funds are investing in cryptocurrency companies.

As of now, financial experts are scrambling to understand the future of this new currency. In a recent roundtable discussion with five financial reporters from NerdWallet, titled "Is Bitcoin Safe?" the writers tried to determine whether investing in cryptocurrency is a safe bet.

Investing writer Andrea Coombes tried to explain the sudden turn around for Bitcoin by saying "With Bitcoin, the underlying value is in question. I mean, you can lose money on a mutual fund investment, but if you believe U.S. and international companies are likely, over the long haul, to continue to make money, you can trust that there will be a general move higher for stocks over time. With Bitcoin, it's hard to even understand what the value is. The value is in the demand itself right now."

Others were a little less optimistic. Writer James Royal sees the meteoric rise in Cryptocurrency stock as a fluke and an investment that people should avoid like the plague. "It's worthless, or near-worthless," said Royal. "Super-investors such as Warren Buffett have made similar comments. Part of the issue is that as long as Bitcoin remains this volatile, it's useless as a currency."

All of this begs the question: is the main allure of investing in cryptocurrency the uncertainty of the industry as a whole? Either way, those who held onto their stock are most likely over the moon with this news. It just remains to be seen if the value keeps rising or comes crashing down to Earth in the weeks to come.

3 Things we saw as the Patriots pulled off an absurd win over the Steelers

The Patriots pulled out an incredible win in what could be labeled as the game of the year.

ERIC WILBUR

1 An AFC road through Pittsburgh. No, wait. New England

Well, it was most definitely a thriller. Can we do this again next week instead of having to deal with the Miami Dolphins and the New York Jets?

After nearly three hours of intensity in Pittsburgh, Sunday's showdown between the Pittsburgh Steelers and New England Patriots came down to the final play when Steelers quarterback Ben Roethlisberger was intercepted by Patriots safety Duron Harmon in the end zone, sealing a 27-24 win over the Steelers. The win gives the Patriots an 11-3 record, tied with the Steelers for the best mark in the AFC and the advantage for home-field advantage in the conference playoffs.

It seemed Pittsburgh's game to win, holding a 24-16 lead after intercepting Tom Brady in the third quarter. But Brady led another rousing comeback in the game's final four minutes, only to watch his defense nearly cough it all up on one play to JuJu Smith-Schuster, who avoided a handful of tackles to bring the ball all the way to the New England 10. It looked as if Roethlisberger found Jesse James for the score in the end zone, but it was ruled an incomplete pass after review. Then came Harmon with the play of the game.

Next week, Buffalo. Do we have to?

2 The interception that nearly sealed their fate

Brady was held to 298 yards passing and a touchdown on the afternoon to go along with his costly interception, the first one he's thrown against the Steelers in a mammoth 12 years. Three hundred and one passing attempts later against Pittsburgh, it also marked the third time in the last two weeks the defending Super Bowl MVP has been picked off by the opposition.

Brady was at fault in trying to force the ball into Rob Gronkowski's hands, a weapon he didn't have last week in Miami. But this game also marked the second-straight subpar effort for the Patriots QB, lending a bit more to the theory that he could be breaking down toward the end of the season. He IS 40 years old (in case you didn't know) and doesn't have last year's four-game suspension to give him the cushion his body might still need. Are we seeing a similar decline this season? Or should we expect more of the Brady we saw in the final four minutes? If history tells us anything, it's the latter. Duh.

3 Game of the year?

In an NFL season that has been filled with its fair share of drab contests (anyone still remember last week's loss in Miami) and also-ran franchises (anything with the Cleveland Browns), everybody expected Pats-Steelers to be special, as it always is. Pittsburgh head coach Mike Tomlin was previewing fireworks as long as three weeks ago, while Belichick was probably busy preparing for the Bills the first time they faced off against them. But Sunday proved that these are without a shadow of a doubt the best two teams in football, most certainly on track for a sequel of Sunday next month in the AFC Championship game. It's in the Patriots' hands now, whether that's home or away.

B's continue struggles with Rangers, Caps

A solid stretch was halted by a pair of losses to a pair of strong Metropolitan opponents.

RICH SLATE
@Richslate
sports@metro.us

Through a constant stream of injuries and issues (namely their goaltending), the Boston Bruins (15-10-5) managed to not only survive in the early goings of 2017-18 but they also pulled themselves up into third-place in the Atlantic Division right in heart of the Eastern Conference playoff mix. In fact, up until a few days ago, they were one of the hottest teams in the NHL (8-2-0 in their last 10 games) before a major dose of reality stopped by TD Garden on Thursday and Saturday.

Washington (21-12-1) is the top team in the stacked Metropolitan Division and their routine 5-3 win extended their win streak over Boston to an alarming 11 games. It was more of the same with the Rangers (18-12-3) — the top Wild Card club in the East — as they transformed the Garden into Madison Square Garden en route to a 3-2 overtime victory that gave them seven-straight wins vs. the B's.

The good news in regards to both the Capitals and Rangers is that the Bruins only have to see each club once more in the regular season. Still, the fact remains that if Boston is going to make the postseason and advance past the first round, odds are that they will see one of those well-rounded clubs at some point.

Trying to explain how both recent series vs. Washington and New York could be so one-sided is hard to do. Naturally, the B's didn't really want to admit the obvious: that the Capitals and Rangers simply own them these days, no matter the time or venue. They cleverly danced around the fact that they are exhausting any methods of solving these difficult riddles.

The Bruins have struggled recently against both the New York Rangers and Washington Capitals. GETTY IMAGES

"I always tend to look at the positives," noted Bruins head coach Bruce Cassidy after Saturday's frustrating setback against New York. "I think that it's too long of a year to dwell on the things that didn't go well. I mean you've got to correct those."

It should be noted that Boston had trailed New York 2-0 in the second period for rallying for a point was at least something to build on.

It would be too simple to say that the Bruins are front-runners or that they just beat up on the inferior teams (looking at you, Buffalo and Arizona). This is the same black and gold team that solely in the month of November beat such quality opponents like Minnesota (17-12-3), Los Angeles (20-10-4), San Jose (17-10-4), Pittsburgh (17-14-3) and Tampa Bay (24-6-2).

Like any sport, there will always be certain teams that you just don't match up with well for whatever reason (think of the Patriots in Miami). The important thing for the B's is that they don't let this recent hiccup become a bigger issue as they have a very busy schedule before Christmas.

They host Columbus (20-12-1) on Monday (7 p.m., NESN), go to Buffalo (8-18-7) on Tuesday (7:30 p.m., NESN), Winnipeg (18-10-5) comes to Boston on Thursday (7 p.m., NESN) and they face the Red Wings (12-13-7) on Saturday afternoon (1 p.m., NESN). The Blue Jackets and Jets should be playoff teams while the Sabres and Red Wings most likely will not be anywhere close. Remember, the B's are 9-5-3 at TD Garden this season so they have a chance to go into the break on a high note.

metro.us/horoscopes

Aries Show discipline and take care of unfinished business before you engage in social activities or make personal changes or plans for upcoming festivities.

Taurus Don't take shortcuts. Gather information before you make a purchase. A change in the way you handle your health, legal and money matters will be required.

Gemini An honest assessment of your finances will help you restructure your spending habits. The changes you make will help you head into the upcoming year with optimism.

Cancer Let your heart guide you when it comes to dealing with loved ones. Pleasing others doesn't have to be costly. Offering help will encourage the same in return.

Leo Plan to make changes that will improve your life, status and direction. Check out what others are doing and learn from the information and research offered.

Virgo Look beyond what's unfolding in front of you. Consider the possibilities and the consequences of making the wrong choice. Trust in your judgment.

Libra Keep moving until you get everything done. You will feel much better if you have made the changes that will give you the freedom to enjoy life, family and friends.

Scorpio A change to the way you earn your living or how you deal with investments or joint ventures will help reconfigure the way you move forward next year.

Sagittarius Dress up your residence and make alterations that will add to your comfort and entertainment. Love and romance are on the rise and will improve your personal life.

Capricorn Being a good listener will give you an advantage. The less anyone knows about you, the easier it will be to execute your plans without interference.

Aquarius Share your opinions and solutions, but not personal information or anything that may affect your reputation or status. Help less fortunate people.

Pisces Trust your instincts, not what someone else tells you. Persuasive tactics will be used if you show vulnerability or inconsistency. EUGENIA LAST
